

<http://miami.curbed.com>
25 octobre 2013

Final touches are being added to Miami's spectacular new art museum, the Perez Art Museum Miami in Museum Park, which will be open for Art Basel in just over a month. The staff has moved in. The art is being (or about to be) hung, placed, and/or installed. The building's real pièce de résistance, the super cool cherry on top of this architectural sundae, the elaborate hanging gardens by Patrick Blanc, the "creator of the living wall", are being installed. (He's the guy with the green hair)

The gardens consist of hanging vertical columns of vibrantly alive plants, pouring down from the building's trellised roof like some heavenly cornucopia of life that just cracked open above you. They are a feast for the eyes, as they were for our photographer Silvia Ros' camera. Oh, and a couple of sculptures of big metal cubes by Jedd Novatt (the guy with the round sunglasses and hat) that wouldn't look out of place in a mall courtyard are going in as well, to be part of the museum's outdoor sculpture garden that will be in Museum Park.

